Week of the Psalter 4

11 October 2020

Fratelli tutti! This is the title of the brand-new encyclical of Pope Francis, released last Sunday. In English, this address of Saint Francis chosen by the Pope as a title could read “all brothers and sisters”, or “we are family”. As we can tell, it deals with “fraternity and social friendship”, and intends to respond to the dreadful tendency to closure that, according to the Pope, is more and more common in our modern society.

This text, which is less than 100 pages, is worth reading. Since it is a bit more demanding than a Netflix sitcom, let me give you a few hints on the content so that you can focus on a chapter or two! You should start with the quick introduction. After a diagnostic of globalisation and social relationships today in chapter 1, chapter 2 offers a meditation of the Parable of the Good Samaritan (Luke 10). Chapter 3 and 4 are my favourites! They explain the necessity and interdependence of both “social friendship” and “universal fraternity”. The first one is how one relates to one’s local environment and chooses openness in everyday life; the second is the natural movement of love that enlarges our hearts to embrace human friendship with all human being. Pope Francis explains why they should both grow in a virtuous circle, and how they might both shrink in a vicious circle. Chapters 5 to 7 develop the political and social consequences of this principle. Finally, chapter 8 concludes with the role religions should play in building local and global fraternity.

It’s been almost a month since I arrived in the UK. I sometimes feel like a complete stranger, especially when I have to drive to some place and get confused with the directions! Much more often, thanks to the welcoming and openness to the people I meet, I feel at home and in family here. I love that Pope Francis concludes the encyclical mentioning Brother Charles de Foucauld (1858-1916). This wonderful saint lived the greatest part of his life as an eremite in the desert of Algeria, trying to become a “universal brother”. This happens when everywhere is home to you, when any one is your brother or sister. We might think that this is not realistic or not pragmatic enough. Indeed, the Pope says that this universal brotherhood is “a dream” that God should inspire to each one of us (§287). One might achieve this goal, he adds, “only identifying with the least”, the poor, the outcast, the stranger.
