+ 30TH SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME

First reading: Exodus 22: 20-26
Second Reading: Thessalonians 1: 5-10
Gospel: Matthew 22: 34-40

Sometimes it helps to spell things out – that is exactly what today's First Reading does with respect to the Gospel reading. It's easy to assume that we're obeying the two great commandments. Of course we love God and our neighbours! But what if the theoretical is brought down to the practical level? That practical level was important to Israel – and to Jesus.

The Laws Jesus recites in today's Gospel reading appear in the Old Testament: the first, in Deuteronomy 6:5, part of Shema (Hebrew for 'hear'), a prayer that Jews recited three times a day; the second, in Leviticus 19:18, one of many Laws of conduct meant to keep Israel set apart or consecrated to the Lord.

The First Reading, from Exodus, is also an excerpt from the Laws. In fact, from Exodus 19:1 to Numbers 10:10 the Laws continue, following the descriptions of Israel's encampment at Mt. Sinai on the way to the Promised Land. While many of those Laws come from a later period, their placement alongside the original ones, suggest that they were understood to show how the people remained faithful in the new land.

Today's readings might be summarized as follows: Do unto others as I have done unto you; for I am compassionate. The Israelites had only to remember that they had once been slaves to recall what God had done for them. This they must do for others.

The Gospel reading is, again, tense with conflict. Jesus is questioned, literally 'tested,' by a 'scholar of the law,' an expert. How ironic-the 'scholar of the law' testing the Son of the Giver of the Law, the one who came 'not to abolish but to fulfill' the Law and the Prophets! Let us pray that we might always live in a manner that is indeed the fulfillment of the 'law and the prophets.'

RITE OF CHRISTIAN INITIATION OF ADULTS

We welcome wholeheartedly into our parish community Stefano Onyekwe and Christian Thomas Irvine who were baptized; Diane Saimon and Margaret Thomas who were confirmed and Steven Onyekwe who was Confirmed and received the Eucharist for the first time on 11th October. Please pray for them as they begin their lives as Catholic Christians.

THANK YOU

After 26 years of leading the preparation of children in the parish to receive their First Holy Communion, Jackie Sheils has decided to stand down from the role. Since 1994, the families of this parish have benefitted from her dedication and commitment to handing on the faith. I wish to record my gratitude to her and her able assistants, Jackie Light, Denise and Blossom McDonagh, who are also stepping away from First Communion preparation. Fr Dermot.
