+ 18TH SUNDAY – YEAR A

“He who has no money, come, buy and eat! Come, buy wine and milk without money.” (Isaiah 55.)

In today's gospel, the Lord feeds over 5,000 people with only the 5 loaves and two fish the disciples could provide (Mt 14.17). By taking and blessing what was offered, He turned it into the great abundance that fed and completely satisfied the large crowd. Those who ate the loaves and fish did not have to pay for it. It was also no fault of theirs that they were hungry, or that they could not fend for themselves at that time. Yet, as the dignity they shared as human beings required, they deserved to have their basic need attended to, the responsibility resting on those who possessed the means. Today, the statistics on world hunger remains startling and embarrassingly high. With the global figures of about 690 million undernourished people and 144 million children stunted by malnutrition, the world has still got a lot to worry about. More shocking, perhaps, is the fact that the small rural farmers who produce about 70% of the global food supply are themselves the ones who suffer food insecurity more than others. Incontrovertibly, the world has enough to feed all its people. What, then, is responsible for world hunger? A lot of people are hungry, not because they are lazy and do not work; many of them work very hard every day to earn their living, but are constrained in their efforts by many factors beyond their control, including poverty, war and conflict, food shortages, climate change, poor nutrition, food waste, bad economy, poor public policies, gender inequality, and forced migration. World hunger will be drastically reduced if only world resources are better managed and more generously shared.
