+ EASTER SUNDAY

“It was early on the first day of the week and still dark.”
(John 20.1)

Our Lord's resurrection took place on the third day following His death, just as it was foretold by Himself and in prophecy (Mt 17.23; Lk 18.33; cf. Hos. 6.2). No one can tell the exact time and manner of the incident, since no one witnessed Him firsthand rising from the dead. Given this absence of an eye-witness, the significant differences we find in the four gospel accounts of the incident are understandable, and the darkness of that Easter morning when the incident was discovered to have taken place continues to pervade our knowledge of the way the resurrection actually occurred. What is indubitable, however, is the evidence of the 'empty tomb' (Jn 20.1-18), and of the fact that something extraordinary did happen that fateful Sunday morning in the tomb where Our Lord's Body had been laid. Even the staunchest adversaries of the Lord, the Jews, acknowledged that something extraordinary did take place, and they were swift in their attempt to cover it up (cf. Mt 28.11-15). We believers need not worry for not having absolute clarity about the manner Our Lord rose from the dead; the doubter is the person to explain: the post-resurrection appearances of the Lord to many eye-witnesses, on one occasion more than 500 of them at the same time (1 Cor. 15.5-8), His obvious transcendence over space and time (cf. Jn 20.19), the supernatural powers and the incredible courage and transformation of the disciples in their persons (Acts 4.1-22), the entire edifice of the Christian faith and life that is built on the reality of the Lord's resurrection (1 Cor. 15.12-34), and the consistent powerful Christian witness of the past 2,000 since that Easter morning.
