Commentary on the Second Reading

Gradually explaining the mystery of salvation in his great Letter to the Romans, Paul has outlined a world sunk in evil. Then he meditates on Abraham's trust in God's promises, the same unwavering trust which is our only way to salvation, an unshaken conviction the God will come to our rescue in our shame and our failures. But what is the means by which God fulfils his promise of obliterating the evil which grips the human race? It can only be the obedience of Jesus, shown in his loving and obedient death on the Cross, which outdoes the disobedience of the whole human race, represented in Adam's sin. It is not the gore and suffering which are in themselves salvific – like a price paid for human delinquency – but the total extent of the love shown in unflinching obedience to the Father's will. It was love for the Father, but also love for us, for whom he was to establish the Kingship of God on earth. Paul seems to argue that, though in normal terms we were not worth dying for, Christ did die for us, just as in his ministry he did not wait for sinners to repent, but actively and unconditionally called them back to himself.
