Letter from Langdon Street

My dear people

For many years I have heard so many people saddened because their children or grandchildren no longer go to mass regularly. They feel guilty that it may be their fault. Could they have done something different? The reality is that none of us is perfect but this does not mean we are at fault. We live in a society where there are powerful influences which go against all that we consider important. The history of the Church shows us that it has always been so. What the Apostles and First Christians did long ago is what we are still doing today. They felt helpless, inadequate, imperfect, just as we do.

At mass today we are taken back into Old Testament times. The prophet Ezekiel lived at one of the most disastrous periods in Jewish history. The people, the priests, the rulers had been dragged into exile far away from their homeland. All the precious articles in the Temple were carried away to be part of the treasury of the King of Babylon. They felt that God had abandoned them. They were being punished for their behaviour, their lifestyle, their sinfulness. Despite all this Ezekiel was sent to support them in their distress and to assure them that despite everything God still loved them. He had not abandoned them. On the contrary he would never leave them. During the past few days a group of priests have been taking part in a retreat in Rome. Pope Francis spoke briefly to them about the love of God expressed in mercy and tenderness. Recalling words of the book of Deuteronomy, he said the tenderness of God is best expressed in His closeness. Without the Lord, we do not know how to walk in the Spirit. Speaking about the 23 Coptic Christian martyrs who were beheaded by Islamic militants in Libya in February, The Pope emphasized that these martyrs gave testimony to God's accompaniment even in times of trial. "They were certain that God did not abandon them," he said. He stressed that priests should be ministers of the tenderness of God, asking that they leave the whip behind in the sacristy. This ministry of tenderness, "is a divine grace," the Pope said.

After assuring the people of Israel that God had not abandoned them the prophet Ezekiel told the people in exile that God had a plan for them which would lead them back to their homeland. He would pluck them up, like taking a tiny twig from a branch. He would transplant them so that they would grow into a mighty tree. We have an English saying: From tiny acorns might oaks do grow. When people from Germany migrated to Australia in the nineteenth century they took with them tiny vine stocks which they planted in their new homeland and provided the foundation for a huge wine industry. Ezekiel's story is similar to the Gospel where Jesus talks about the tiny mustard which grew into a large bush, big enough for birds to shelter in its branches. Once again we are being told today about the Kingdom of God. Despite its early beginnings, from an unknown young man who died on a cross, it has not only survived over two thousand years of history chequered by good times and bad times, it has a membership of over two billion people, with 1.2 billion people belonging to the Catholic Church.

Yours sincerely

Parish Priest
