Any experience of undeserved love is likely to be transformative, though it is hard for some people to believe the love of God. It took some persuasion for Simon Peter to open himself to the powerful love of God that cleanses and transforms. Faith empowered him to make a difference in his world, saving people instead of catching fish.

Many people expect little from life, convinced that they are unlovable or beyond redemption. Jesus calls us to “put out into deeper”, to trust that God really does love and want to bless us. Faith is a kind of venturing out. Fear may hold us back. But the Lord is willing to be part of our everyday experience; to accompany us to places within ourselves where we dare not to touch; to gift our lives with abundance. We should not be afraid. Let’s allow God to enter in our lives and fill us with his touch of love. Then we will be able to taste happiness and share it with others.
